

Remember biology class or more precisely ethology class where you learned how male animals wooed females fighting off male competitors with the innate desire to perpetuate their genes with the chosen females: the waggle dance of the stickleback, the heat for red and fallow deer, the praying mantis who devours her beloved after 'consummation'...

Animals somehow know how to get together in an exclusive way to procreate on a level that maintains and/or extends their species. Shouldn't the humans also have an intrinsic way of behaving when it comes to finding their sexual partners and ensure the survival of their kind?

Today men and women are so confused by the influence of media, movies, music industry nudging us into imitating so called 'stars' and their sexual behaviour. Yet is this kind of over-sexualized, vulgarized predatory behaviour natural? If not, how did nature initially intend us to behave romantically the objective always being, as for all living creatures, the continuation of our line and our kin?

For this we need to look at the time before the pill and welfare system where women were obliged to choose their future husband and sexual partner carefully to not find themselves alone with their offspring which could end tragically or even deadly.

Going much further back, the symbiosis of male and female competencies was crucial for the survival of whole tribes, men going hunting and women keeping the fire and watching the children.

If academia tells us today that women behaving like men and men behaving like women are perfectly fit for relationships why doesn't it provide us an explanation for the disastrous outcome in building families and maintaining our demography? Media and corporations tell us that race mixing is the moral thing to do yet miss to mention that civilization is based on race and that destroying a race equals destroying a civilization.

Looking around and seeing the complete destruction of our Western world by an imposed anti-white agenda called 'diversity' more and more of whites wake up and recognize that if we want to survive as a distinct people we urgently need to go back to nature, practise in-group preference and accept the archaic way as eternally valid:

The man proposes the woman disposes. Harmony is created by the everlasting flow of energy from positive to negative, knowing that two positives or two negatives will never create a current.

That means that white men need to rediscover their romantic audacity and protective instincts becoming also increasingly valuable in times of physical racial struggles. White women however are wise to enhance their receptive, feminine side which represents the negative pole. That includes the knowledge about making herself pretty, moving and talking softly, how to make a home and obviously the inclination to embrace multiple motherhood.

So if you still feel clouded and do not know what kind of partner to chose, observe nature telling us that we are always better off with someone who resembles us ethnically and culturally and who behaves in a way nature originally wanted us to behave meaning men manly and women womanly because nature wants us to survive.

